Organizational profile of English heritage. Historic royal palaces and major stakeholders Feb 21 2020 Essay from the year 2018 in the subject English - Applied Geography, grade: 5.00, Manchester Metropolitan University Business School, language: English, abstract: The history of English heritage starts from distant 1882

when the collection of remarkable buildings and monuments began. Being a responsibility of the Office of Works at that stage, the Act of Parliament in 1913 transformed it into an impressive collection of 273 sites. Also, all these places including Stonehenge, Carisbrook Castle, and Richborough Roman fort, were open to the public. In the period after the Second World War due to financial grounds, the National Trust took responsibility of the county houses, owned by English Heritage and the Ministry of Works restricted its activities to the older monuments. It was remarkable that by 1970 the English part of the collection accounted for 300 sites, visited by 5.5 million people. In 1983, under the rule of Margaret Thatcher's government and its first chairman Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, it received the name English Heritage. Furthermore, the organization performed two important tasks during his rule; first, it initiated the national system of protection of the heritage and second took care of the National Heritage Collections. Several innovations such as the introduction of a membership scheme and the collection of buildings such as country houses took place in the period from 1986 to mid-2000s. Three years ago in 2015, the national heritage collection was shifted to a charitable trust.

The Collection 2018 Feb 27 2023 This is the second collection of social poetry by the author, Paul Anthony Obey. The work has a liberal conscience and a yearning for change. The hope is that it provokes some thought, some thing. The topics covered are as random as a reimagining of popular nursery rhymes, love songs, hypothetical news stories, popularity and the zeitgeist, gender inequality, disability achievements and social media etiquette. This work pokes a little fun at perspective and how with a little change in belief, some long-held truths can be challenged and repackaged in a more positive way. As long as I have been alive, an inquisitive mind has been suspicious, questioning the known truths and long-held beliefs of how things work, how they are and why they have to be that way. Of course, in the daily grind of living, I have reluctantly played the game the way it has been set up but have been morally active and mildly subversive all the same. Those with the power, still have the power and the weakest in society remain curtailed. If every vote counts, then why aren't we all counting? If I can't change it on my own, you can, we can together. Remember, it's not what it means, it's what it means to you.

Survey of Academic Library Plans for the Print Materials

Collection, 2018 Edition Dec 21 2019 This report, based on data from 49 colleges and universities in the USA and Canada, looks closely at academic library plans for print versions of journals, books, newspapers and magazines, directories and maps, drawings, photographs and other materials. The study finds that libraries are shrinking their book collections and that spending on print book collections is declining. Nonetheless, close to 40% of survey participants felt insecure about the perpetual access policies of major eBook vendors, a factor limiting declines in print book collections. The 97-page study also reports on trends and gives data on spending on print journal subscriptions without online access, spending on print directories, maps, newspapers and magazines and other items. Libraries also discuss how they make their culling decisions, whom they consult, how they survey their user base and what their plans are for their print collections in the near future.
